

I am writing to express my vehement opposition to the proposed weakening of Wisconsin's No Call List.

I pay for telephone service for the convenience of myself, my family and my friends. I do not purchase telephone service in order to provide businesses yet another route to invade my privacy with unwanted solicitations. If they want to contact me, they can write a letter, pay for the postage, and send it through the U.S. Mail. At least then they'll be paying for the privilege while also supporting a vital public service.

The Wisconsin No Call List ain't broke, so don't fix it. Leave it alone.
